A Moroccan harira hug for cooler sukkah evenings

Sephardic Spice Girls' gluten-free harvest soup – red lentils, chickpeas, squash, and a lemon finish.

Sharon Gomperts and Rachel Emquies Sheff published a Sukkot harira on Sep 24 – a Moroccan tomato-based soup whose name comes from the Arabic for silk, thanks to soft red lentils.

The gluten-free pot leans on fall harvest vegetables: butternut squash, sweet potato, carrot, potato, and zucchini, plus chickpeas, turmeric, cumin, harissa, parsley, and cilantro. Simmer about an hour after the lentils go in, finish with lemon, and ladle it hot under the sukkah.

STYLE DESK · FALL 2026

Check coats, teddy texture, and a funnel-neck trench

Lauren Knowles's Sep 25 ELLE Canada coat guide picks the outerwear worth meeting cooler sukkah evenings.

Checkered coats, leather with funnel necks, and faux-fur teddy texture lead the list, alongside chin-grazing trenches.

Toggle closures and a hit of vivid colour show up beside the neutrals – practical Canadian warmth without a full closet reset.

RECOMMENDED

Simmer the harira before candles

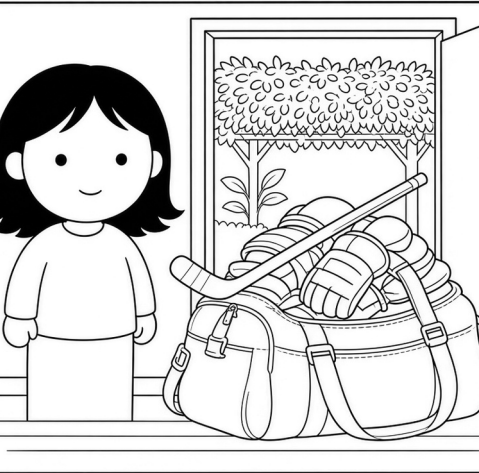

About an hour on the stove after the lentils go in; finish with lemon for tonight under the sukkah.

One coat, not a closet

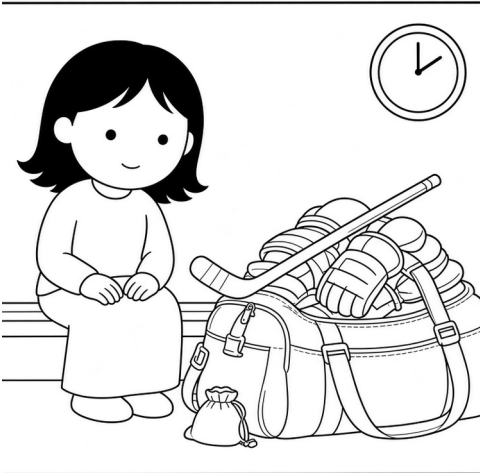

A check coat or funnel-neck trench covers the cooler sukkah evenings without a wardrobe rebuild.

Event details can change; check the listing before going.

DEAR TIMES

May the hockey bag believe the calendar?

Dear Times, Sukkot I landed with Jonah-Hockey on the board, so I packed like it was still the long Bill Bolton block. The live calendar now says 12:30–1:30 only. Do I haul the marathon bag anyway, or trust the short window and keep the afternoon for the sukkah before 7:50 candles?

– Overpacked in Toronto

DEAR OVERPACKED, Trust the short window. Water bottle yes; spare-jersey mountain no. A one-hour skate still counts, and Sukkot I can have the afternoon back before the 7:50 lighting.
