Bubby's split pea soup with flanken for the sukkah hop

Samantha Frank Wengrofsky's Ashkenazi fall pot – dill, potatoes, shredded short ribs.

Samantha Frank Wengrofsky told the Jewish Food Society that fall meant hopping from sukkah to sukkah for brisket, stuffed cabbage, and warm bowls of her Bubby's split pea soup with flanken – bone-in short ribs cut across the bone.

She sears the flanken, builds a pot with onion, carrot, celery, peas, potatoes, and dill, then simmers dried split peas in broth until the meat shreds back into a smooth or chunky bowl. A Chol HaMoed supper that travels well under the greens – about 1½-2 hours, 8-10 servings.

STYLE DESK · FALL 2026

Funnel necks, toggles, and jackets that earn their keep

Irina Grechko's Harper's Bazaar Fall 2026 jacket guide tracks runways that swung between prim lady jackets and practical shells: military and officer styles, butter-yellow jolts, decorative toggles, tech anoraks, dramatic funnel necks, cropped peplums, and contrast collars.

For a cloudy Chol HaMoed week in Toronto, the practical read is a funnel-neck layer that can skip the scarf, or a toggle-closure jacket with enough structure for the school run. No prices in this paper.

No prices in this paper – treat the edit as a collar-and-toggle checklist, not a shopping list.

DEAR TIMES

Garlic knots before the split-pea pot?

Dear Times, It's Chol HaMoed Tuesday – pasta and garlic knots at RHA – and I'm eyeing Samantha Frank Wengrofsky's split pea soup with flanken for the sukkah tonight. Do I save the knots as a side for the soup, or treat school lunch as a closed chapter and start fresh with dill and a big ladle?

– Knot-Curious in Toronto

Dear Knot-Curious, Let school lunch stay at school. Warm the soup with fresh dill and a proper ladle under the greens; if anyone still wants a knot, toast a new batch at home. Tomorrow's Breakfast in the Sukkah is early enough without leftover garlic diplomacy.
