A Southern egg casserole for the break-fast table

Skye Estroff's Noshers recipe soaks cubed challah overnight with cheddar and eggs, then bakes before the fast ends.

The casserole spreads cubed challah in a baking dish, covers it with shredded cheddar, and pours on eggs whisked with half-and-half and mustard powder. It chills overnight so the bread absorbs the custard, then bakes about 45 to 50 minutes until set. Estroff serves it with cream cheese grits and biscuits as a gentler break-fast than a heavy bagel spread.

Fall 2026 coats, shirts, and color blocks

Vogue's fall 2026 roundup puts shearling outerwear, button-down shirts, and bright color blocking ahead of another all-black closet.

Face-framing coats for cold weather and updated shirts for day showed up across the collections.

The practical move is one strong coat or shirt upgrade rather than rebuilding every layer.

DEAR TIMES

Should the egg casserole go in before Jonah's swim?

Dear Times, Sunday has Jonah's first fall swim at 12:55 and Erev Yom Kippur candles at 7:00. I want to assemble a break-fast egg casserole that needs overnight chill before Monday. If I mix it before the swim, it sits all afternoon. If I wait until after candles, it may not chill long enough. When should the dish go into the fridge?

– Overnight Soak, Toronto

Dear Overnight Soak, Assemble it before the swim if you can. A long chill is fine; a short chill before baking is the risk. The swim and candle times are fixed. The casserole can wait in the fridge.
