CTV / MARY BERG

Mary Berg broils a bubbling Croque Monsieur for a cold day

Her Oct. 15 recipe layers Dijon, Gruyère and an herby béchamel between toasted bread, finished under the broiler.

Mary Berg starts with a quick béchamel: butter and flour toasted for 30 seconds, warmed milk whisked in, then Herbes de Provence and nutmeg. Parmigiano Reggiano and a first handful of Gruyère melt in once it coats a spoon.

Toasted bread gets Dijon, ham if using, béchamel and Gruyère, then a second slice and more sauce and cheese. Five minutes at 400°F, then two to three under the broiler, turns the tops golden and bubbling – a warm plate after a cold rink.

ELLE

Laura Tarafa maps five runway sweater trends for a colder fall

Laura Tarafa writes that with cooler weather finally here, the spring/summer 2027 runways are full of knitwear ideas. When the rest of an outfit leans minimal, she suggests an oversized argyle.

Her picks: logo pullovers (Tory Burch, Tommy Hilfiger), classic crewnecks (Loewe, Stella McCartney), florals (Stine Goya, Monse), lightweight V-necks (Tod's, Sandy Liang) and texture, from Prada's checkered knits to Bottega Veneta's open stitch. A V-neck over a button-down suits a 3°C morning.

Vijaya Selvaraju's chocolate chip ricotta cake

Vijaya Selvaraju creams butter, olive oil and sugar, beats in ricotta and three eggs, adds vanilla and orange zest, then folds in chocolate chips. It bakes in a 9-inch round at 350°F for 50 to 55 minutes – a warm oven for a cold weekend.

DEAR TIMES

How many layers does a cold rink need?

Dear Times, Jonah's Sabres play the Flyers at 1:30 at Bill Bolton, and this is the first truly cold day: 3°C at dawn, feels like −1°C. My winter coat is still at the back of the closet. Do I dress for the short walk from the car, or for an hour on a cold arena bench?

— Bench-Warmer, Toronto

Dear Reader, Dress for the bench. The rink stays cold even with the sun out at 11°C, so wear a warm layer under the coat, wool socks, and bring a blanket to sit on. A thermos of something hot covers the third period. You can unzip in the lobby.
