COOKING

A slow pot-au-feu with a story: beef and root vegetables, low and patient

Leah Koenig shares a recipe from a new cookbook of World War II survival stories

Leah Koenig shares chef Alon Shaya's pot-au-feu from June Hersh's new cookbook, “Memories of a Good Meal: Recipes of Resilience Inspired by Stories of WWII Survival.” The headnote ties the dish to the hidden children of wartime France. It serves 6 to 8: beef chuck, with marrow bones if you like, goes into a pot with carrots, parsnips, waxy potatoes, fennel, turnip, eight garlic cloves, dried mushrooms, thyme, allspice, bay leaves and four cups of broth.

It cooks slowly in a 275°F oven. Check it after about 1½ hours and keep going until the beef reaches 200°F inside. Slice the meat, brush it with Dijon mustard, and serve it with the vegetables, crusty bread and cornichons. Our note: it is already dairy-free, so it works for a Shabbat or weekend meat meal as written.

FASHION

Denim, seven ways for fall

Jalil Johnson walks through this fall's denim trends with outfit ideas for each. Dark indigo denim-on-denim gets low-heeled booties and an oversize cashmere peacoat. A denim dress pairs with a long-line knit cardigan and loafers. Skinny jeans, back from Khaite and Valentino, go with a short-sleeve knit and calf-hair mules.

Utility jeans work with a cropped leather jacket or a quarter-zip and white sneakers. Slouchy jeans get a cognac suede wrap coat and red flats. The preppy knee-to-ankle denim skirt, seen at Dior and Prada, takes a tweed blazer and suede boots. For colour, try red jeans with a grey henley and a purple belt.

RECOMMENDED

Sheet-pan lemon chicken and potatoes, with a sauce that does double duty

Carolina Gelen says she went through 42 lemons testing this one. A lemon-pepper mayonnaise is the marinade for boneless chicken thighs and also the sauce at the table; russet potatoes roast on the same pan at 425°F, with the pan moving between racks, and honey and lemon slices go on partway through. It takes about 1 hour 20 minutes and serves 4 to 6. Our note: it has no dairy, so it works as a weeknight meat meal.

PUZZLES

3:15 p.m.: early dismissal, and the schnitzel review is glowing.

4 p.m.: the challah gets braided; the Halloween cape gets a test run.

5:53 p.m.: candles lit. The cape is staying for dinner.

DEAR TIMES

My son wants to wear his hockey gear as a costume. Is that allowed?

Dear Times, My nine-year-old has hockey on Halloween morning and a costume party that night. He says the easiest plan is to stay in his jersey and call himself a hockey player. I bought a costume weeks ago, and it is still in the bag. Do I let the jersey win?

— Costume Still in the Bag, Toronto

Dear Reader, Let him pick, but give him a deadline: costume decisions made at 4:45 p.m. tend to end badly. A jersey counts as a costume if he adds one thing, like a painted-on black eye or a big plastic trophy. The bought costume can wait for a school dress-up day or next year, if it still fits. It will be about 9°C and dry at 7 p.m., so whatever he picks, a layer underneath helps.
