DAILY BRIEF — ZORAH'S DAILY HOME

YOUR DAY

Rain ends early, the sky clears by afternoon, and it's picture retake day

Kislev 2 · Picture Retake Day · Daily brief at sdltor.github.io/household-groceries/

Zorah, today is Kislev 2 on the school calendar, and it is Picture Retake Day at RHA. JK and SK go skating, and lunch is Chinese food with a spring roll. There is nothing on Jonah's calendar today.

Environment Canada has periods of rain ending early this morning, then cloud with a 40 percent chance of showers before it clears this afternoon. The high is 9°C, about the normal of 8, with a northeast wind of 20 km/h gusting to 40. Tonight cloud returns early in the evening and the low is zero.

Friday is cloudy and colder, with a high of 5, and brings the 2:30 dismissal, progress reports and candles at 4:36. The weekend has Jonah's hockey on Saturday and swimming plus Stone's party on Sunday. Next Thursday there is no school, with student-led conferences and Jonah's school meeting at 6:10 p.m. The Daily brief at sdltor.github.io/household-groceries/ keeps the running household list.

COOKING

Bitter Brussels sprouts are a heat problem, not a vegetable problem

Serious Eats says gentle cooking brings out the sulfur, and a sheet pan preheated to 500°F brings out the sweetness

Leah Colins, Serious Eats' senior culinary editor, argues that sprouts turn bitter and swampy when they are cooked too gently. Boiling, steaming or roasting below about 400°F breaks their sulfur compounds into funky flavours and wipes out the sharp, mustardy notes that give them pleasant bitterness. High heat does the opposite: the cut faces brown and the natural sugars caramelize, so sweetness balances the bite.

Her method, after Kenji's roasted sprouts: heat the oven to 500°F with the empty sheet pan inside, toss halved sprouts generously with oil and salt, and listen for an immediate sizzle when they hit the pan. Set them cut-side down with space between them, since crowding means steaming, and roast until deeply browned. Finish with vinegar, citrus, cheese, chile sauce or a glaze. Our note, not the article's: with oil only, they're pareve and go with any meal.

FASHION

Three accessories that change a pair of jeans: a brooch, a silk scarf and a plaque belt

Allyson Payer's point for Who What Wear is that jeans stay constant while what goes with them changes. Naomi Watts, spotted in downtown New York in jeans and a blazer, added three pieces Payer calls the season's denim-friendly trends: a fabric corsage brooch, a French-girl silk scarf knotted at the neck, and a Western plaque belt that reads sleeker than the Western belts of recent seasons.

Payer says they work one at a time or all together, as Watts wore them. On a raw, gusty day like today, the knotted scarf earns its keep twice: it finishes the outfit and covers the neck when the northeast wind picks up to 40.

The National Ballet's Emergence and Silent Screen open Friday

The National Ballet of Canada pairs Crystal Pite's Emergence with Sol León and Paul Lightfoot's Silent Screen in a double bill at the Four Seasons Centre for the Performing Arts, running November 13 to 20, according to Very Toronto's weekend listings. Pite's piece is one of the company's signature works, and the run gives a full week of dates to pick from.

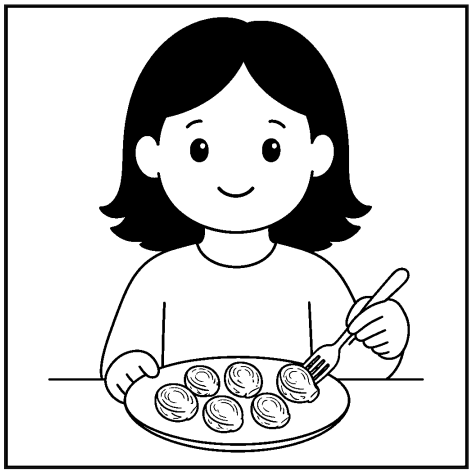

PUZZLES

Halved sprouts, plenty of oil and salt. The empty pan is already in a 500°F oven.

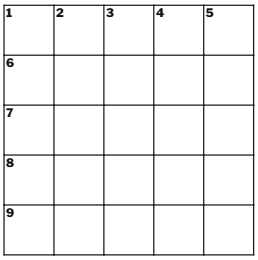

No sizzle, no deal. This pan sizzles.

Cut-side down, with room to breathe. No more politely tolerated sprouts.

DEAR TIMES

Wet first thing, clear later: when do I go out?

Dear Times, I woke to rain on the window. Is today a write-off for errands, or does it turn around?

— Waiting It Out, Toronto

Dear Reader, It turns around. Environment Canada has the rain ending early this morning, a 40 percent chance of a shower after that, and clearing this afternoon, with a high of 9. The northeast wind gusts to 40, so a scarf helps. Go after lunch if you can. Friday is cloudy with a high of only 5, so today's afternoon is the milder window.
